

MOE'S
Reclaimed
Wood

DESIGNED AND MANUFACTURED BY MOE'S FOR TODAY'S LIFESTYLE

Vancouver • 1728 Glen Drive
(Terminal Ave.) 604.687.5599
N. Van • #125-1305 Welch St.
(Off Pemberton) 778.340.6392 www.MoesHome.ca

B.C. professional organizers offer clutter-clearing tips in 'Good Riddance'

THE CANADIAN PRESS

By Lauren La Rose, The Canadian Press | The Canadian Press – Tue, 18 Jan 5:39 PM EST

Share retweet 1 Email Print

RELATED CONTENT

Professional organizers Heather Knittel, left, and Susan Borax, owners of Good Riddance ...

It's not uncommon for people to want to keep treasured possessions that elicit warm memories, like a baseball mitt from Little League or a quilt crafted by Grandma.

But what about the stickered piece of a glove compartment salvaged from a Volvo? Or sheets and linens for beds you no longer own? And Christmas decorations you keep year after year but no longer put up?

Since starting Burnaby, B.C.-based Good Riddance Professional Organizing Solutions in 2004, co-owners Susan Borax and Heather Knittel have seen it all and more as they help clients downsize.

In their book, "Good Riddance: Showing Clutter the Door," the professional organizers describe some of the prime clutter culprits and share practical tips to help individuals clear their congested spaces.

Knittel said when they go to clients' homes, they always find self-help books on topics like decluttering and having the perfect home.

They decided to take a different approach with "Good Riddance" by not having people take their clutter too seriously.

"Everybody sort of freaks out about a lot of their stuff but what we've found over and over again in the homes that we've worked in is we see the same stuff," Knittel said.

"Our premise is if you get rid of those things, you are going to be creating space in your home for the things you really love and want to have around you."

Their light-hearted take is evident from the first chapter as they list identifiers of Completely Ridiculous Useless Debris, or CRUD.

On the list: "Any box you are afraid to open," "Anything that needs to be assembled but never was," and unfinished projects like "baby booties for your daughter who received her MBA this year."

"If these things are just hanging around... let's look at them and figure out why, and get rid of them if they're not being utilized," Knittel said.

They also guide readers through a tour of their home, going room by room to identify items they might find in these areas.

Knittel said a common clutter culprit is too many mugs. "We often see a couple or a single person and they might have 30 mugs in their kitchen cupboard," Knittel said. "Why would one person need so many things? That's kind of what we're trying to get our clients to think about." Guys tend to collect baseball caps, and are also "crazy about tools." Knittel said they will often find multiples of items, like 10 hammers.

In some cases, people have such an emotional attachment to items they have a hard time parting ways.

"If there are items that they're just holding ... because their Great Aunt Molly gave it to them, sometimes we suggest maybe if you don't want the item, you could take a picture of it, and just having the photograph will conjure up those same warm and fuzzy feelings," Knittel said.

She knows it can be overwhelming to start decluttering, particularly if it's a big project. If someone can't afford the services of a professional organizer, she suggests asking a good friend to help out who will be sensitive to their situation.

"The person has to understand that from time to time, as you're going through all this stuff, emotions are going to well up at one point, and you can't be standing over the person saying, 'Oh, for crying out loud, just chuck it out, it doesn't mean anything,'" she said. "You have to have a sense of understanding where the person is coming from."

NEWS FOR YOU

- UN Security Council considers resolution declaring Israeli settlements illegal
- Young Canadians focusing on other financial goals, neglecting RRSPs: Poll
- Shooting victim ordered away from Tea Party leader
- Tentative contract reached for workers aboard Terra Nova offshore oil vessel
- UPDATE 5-ASML's profits surge on demand for smartphone chips

ADVERTISEMENT

It's important for people to ask themselves the last time they used the item, whether they have a duplicate, and ultimately, if they really love it.

Maintaining your space once you have decluttered is easy — the hard part is putting the time aside to actually do it, she noted. One of the strategies they'll sometimes use with clients is leaving them with homework to declutter a junk drawer, for example. They'll also advise them to set a timer to limit how long they'll spend on a task, which will help them stay focused.

While many feel they can't throw out an item with someone's face on it, Knittel said dealing with photos has to be done in the same manner as other possessions: "Keep the best and chuck out the rest."

"You can keep it if it's the only picture you have of that relative, but if you go through the pictures and (say) 'Oh my God, I looked awful that day,' chuck it out. Why are you keeping it?" she asked.

Same goes for repetitive images.

"How many sunset photos do you really need?" she asked. "One of Maui in 1986 is probably sufficient."

Clothing can be a bit more of a challenge.

"With clothing specifically, sometimes there can be guilt associated with the fact that 'Gee, I paid 800 bucks for that suit and it doesn't fit me properly' or 'I don't really like it,'" Knittel said.

"We've all purchased something that we think is a wonderful idea at the time, but you get it home and for whatever reason it's not something you migrate towards when you see it on when you're getting dressed in the morning."

Knittel said some clients may have sizes ranging from 10 to 14 in their closet because their weight fluctuates.

As a rule of thumb, if something hasn't been worn in at least a year, or in some cases two, it's time to get rid of it.

Not everything has to be bound for the bin. Knittel said they try to recycle everything, and provide a resource guide for donating items.

Online:

Good Riddance Professional Organizing Solutions: www.goodriddance.ca

more ▾

Powered by Sympatico.ca

Home | Français | Help | Feedback

Blog

Downloads

Help & How-To

News

Photography

Reviews

Video

CES

Home > Sync > News > B.C. professional organizers offer clutter-clearing tips in 'Good Riddance'

Text Size A A A

:: From The Blog...

Video: Preview of next 'Deus Ex' video game

While most of the attention at the Consumer Electronics Show (CES) is devoted to gadgets rather than games, there were a few impressive showings of upcoming interactive entertainment. Here's a glimpse at Square Enix's Deus Ex: Human Revolution, currently in development at Eidos Montreal. Sync readers, how do you think it looks?

Samsung Sliding PC: Best of both worlds?

Despite the current excitement over tablets, they don't quite do everything a laptop can.

Facebook decides not to give your number and address to developers - yet

In its latest round of Dumb Privacy PR Moves, Facebook has backtracked on its decision to let developers access member's phone numbers and home address.

Video: Hands-on with Acer Iconia

prototype
In this informal video from the 2011 Consumer Electronics Show (CES) in Las Vegas, I chat about the Acer Iconia, a prototype laptop that features not one but two 15-inch touchscreens — and no physical keyboard whatsoever. Awesome or asinine?

Video: Netflix adds

Dolby Digital Plus audio
Streaming movies are convenient because you no longer need to leave the house to rent something. Then we saw a bump in quality, now delivering HD movies on services like Netflix. Well, now the audio can rival that of DVDs and Blu-ray discs thanks to Dolby Digital Plus technology. Here's a video overview from the 2011 Consumer Electronics Show (CES).

Read More and Discuss ▶

:: NEWS

B.C. professional organizers offer clutter-clearing tips in 'Good Riddance'

18/01/2011 5:39:00 PM

Lauren La Rose, The Canadian Press

It's not uncommon for people to want to keep treasured possessions that elicit warm memories, like a baseball mitt from Little League or a quilt crafted by Grandma.

But what about the stickered piece of a glove compartment salvaged from a Volvo? Or sheets and linens for beds you no longer own? And Christmas decorations you keep year after year but no longer put up?

Since starting Burnaby, B.C.-based Good Riddance Professional Organizing Solutions in 2004, co-owners Susan Borax and Heather Knittel have seen it all and more as they help clients downsize.

In their book, "Good Riddance: Showing Clutter the Door," the professional organizers describe some of the prime clutter culprits and share practical tips to help individuals clear their congested spaces.

Knittel said when they go to clients' homes, they always find self-help books on topics like decluttering and having the perfect home.

They decided to take a different approach with "Good Riddance" by not having people take their clutter too seriously.

"Everybody sort of freaks out about a lot of their stuff but what we've found over and over again in the homes that we've worked in is we see the same stuff," Knittel said.

"Our premise is if you get rid of those things, you are going to be creating space in your home for the things you really love and want to have around you."

Their light-hearted take is evident from the first chapter as they list identifiers of Completely Ridiculous Useless Debris, or CRUD.

On the list: "Any box you are afraid to open," "Anything that needs to be assembled but never was," and unfinished projects like "baby booties for your daughter who received her MBA this year."

"If these things are just hanging around... let's look at them and figure out why, and get rid of them if they're not being utilized," Knittel said.

They also guide readers through a tour of their home, going room by room to identify items they might find in these areas.

Continued...

View article on a single page

◀ Prev 1 | 2 | 3 | 4 Next ▶▶

Print this page Share this page digg.com Windows Live Spaces

Facebook StumbleUpon

:: More Tech & Science Articles from The Canadian Press

Ebay revenue rises in fourth quarter, helped by holiday shopping season

New study questions claims that stored carbon dioxide is leaking

Vancouver prof wades into debate; declares Earth-like planet doesn't exist

Agency: China's Internet population rises to 457 million, still growing rapidly

University to refit Coast Guard ship into hybrid fuel cell vessel for research

Tech trends firm predicts Canadians will flock to media tablets in 2011

Nintendo says 3-D handheld gaming system on sale in the U.S. in March for US$250

TV makers want viewers to surf the net, find digital content on their smart TVs

2 charged with hacking AT&T website, stealing info of some 100,000 iPad users

B.C. professional organizers offer clutter-clearing tips in 'Good Riddance'

:: More Tech & Science Articles from CBC.ca

Silicon quantum computing leap made

Greener B.C. research ship to use fuel cells

advertisement

AIR NEW ZEALAND

Rotorua

*Restrictions, taxes, fees and additional baggage charge may apply

100% PURE
newzealand.com

▲ Today's top stories on Sympatico.ca

News carrier rescues elderly woman from cold

Entire country bans Valentine's gifts

Nun's skeleton found in checked bags

Dire Straits record sales skyrocket

\$50M lottery jackpot still unpaid

:: Latest Tech Quiz

The Great Smartphone Challenge

Are you as smart as your smartphone? Time to find out.

:: Latest Galleries

10 must-own iPad apps

Receive a new iPad as a gift over the holidays? If so, you might be overwhelmed with how many downloadable applications ("apps") there are for your new tablet. No worries, we've got some great suggestions for you.

Last-minute gift ideas for the gadget geeks in your life

Chances are there's at least one or two people on your gift list who can't live without their smartphone or the new tablet computer they scooped up this year. Or maybe you'll unwrap a gift that could benefit from an accessory? Here are a few good ideas for add-ons.

Top 10 Tech Hits Of The Decade

What were the biggest tech launches every year since 2000?

Winnipeg Free Press > Life & Style > Home and Family > B.C. PROFESSIONAL ORGANIZERS OFFER CLUTTER-CLEARING TIPS IN 'GOOD RIDDANCE'

HOME AND FAMILY

The Canadian Press - ONLINE EDITION

B.C. professional organizers offer clutter-clearing tips in 'Good Riddance'

By: Lauren La Rose, The Canadian Press
Posted: 01/18/2011 5:14 PM | Comments: 0

PRINT | E-MAIL | Tweet 0 | SHARE 0 | SHARE NEW | REPORT ERROR

It's not uncommon for people to want to keep treasured possessions that elicit warm memories, like a baseball mitt from Little League or a quilt crafted by Grandma.

But what about the stickered piece of a glove compartment salvaged from a Volvo? Or sheets and linens for beds you no longer own? And Christmas decorations you keep year after year but no longer put up?

Since starting Burnaby, B.C.-based Good Riddance Professional Organizing Solutions in 2004, co-owners Susan Borax and Heather Knittel have seen it all and more as they help clients downsize.

In their book, "Good Riddance: Showing Clutter the Door," the professional organizers describe some of the prime clutter culprits and share practical tips to help individuals clear their congested spaces.

Knittel said when they go to clients' homes, they always find self-help books on topics like decluttering and having the perfect home.

They decided to take a different approach with "Good Riddance" by not having people take their clutter too seriously.

"Everybody sort of freaks out about a lot of their stuff but what we've found over and over again in the homes that we've worked in is we see the same stuff," Knittel said.

"Our premise is if you get rid of those things, you are going to be creating space in your home for the things you really love and want to have around you."

Their light-hearted take is evident from the first chapter as they list identifiers of Completely Ridiculous Useless Debris, or CRUD.

On the list: "Any box you are afraid to open," "Anything that needs to be assembled but never was," and unfinished projects like "baby booties for your daughter who received her MBA this year."

"If these things are just hanging around... let's look at them and figure out why, and get rid of them if they're not being utilized," Knittel said.

They also guide readers through a tour of their home, going room by room to identify items they might find in these areas.

Knittel said a common clutter culprit is too many mugs. "We often see a couple or a single person and they might have 30 mugs in their kitchen cupboard," Knittel said. "Why would one person need so many things? That's kind of what we're trying to get our clients to think about." Guys tend to collect baseball caps, and are also "crazy about tools." Knittel said they will often find multiples of items, like 10 hammers.

In some cases, people have such an emotional attachment to items they have a hard time parting ways.

"If there are items that they're just holding ... because their Great Aunt Molly gave it to them, sometimes we suggest maybe if you don't want the item, you could take a picture of it, and just having the photograph will conjure up those same warm and fuzzy feelings," Knittel said.

She knows it can be overwhelming to start decluttering, particularly if it's a big project. If someone can't afford the services of a professional organizer, she suggests asking a good friend to help out who will be sensitive to their situation.

"The person has to understand that from time to time, as you're going through all this stuff, emotions are going to well up at one point, and you can't be standing over the person saying, 'Oh, for crying out loud, just chuck it out, it doesn't mean anything,'" she said. "You have to have a sense of understanding where the person is coming from."

It's important for people to ask themselves the last time they used the item, whether they have a duplicate, and ultimately, if they really love it.

Maintaining your space once you have decluttered is easy — the hard part is putting the time aside to actually do it, she noted. One of the strategies they'll sometimes use with clients is leaving them with homework to declutter a junk drawer, for example. They'll also advise them to set a timer to limit how long they'll spend on a task, which will help them stay focused.

While many feel they can't throw out an item with someone's face on it, Knittel said dealing with photos has to be done in the same manner as other possessions: "Keep the best and chuck out the rest."

"You can keep it if it's the only picture you have of that relative, but if you go through the pictures and (say) 'Oh my God, I looked awful that day,' chuck it out. Why are you keeping it?" she asked.

Same goes for repetitive images.

"How many sunset photos do you really need?" she asked. "One of Maui in 1986 is probably sufficient."

Clothing can be a bit more of a challenge.

"With clothing specifically, sometimes there can be guilt associated with the fact that 'Gee, I paid 800 bucks for that suit and it doesn't fit me properly' or 'I don't really like it,'" Knittel said.

"We've all purchased something that we think is a wonderful idea at the time, but you get it home and for whatever reason it's not something you migrate towards when you see it on when you're getting dressed in the morning."

Knittel said some clients may have sizes from 10 to 14 in their closet because their weight fluctuates.

As a rule of thumb, if something hasn't been worn in at least a year, or in some cases two, it's time to get rid of it.

Not everything has to be bound for the bin. Knittel said they try to recycle everything, and provide a resource guide for donating items.

Online:

Good Riddance Professional Organizing Solutions: www.goodriddance.ca

Recommend Be the first of your friends to recommend this.

PRINT | E-MAIL | Tweet 0 | SHARE 0 | SHARE NEW | REPORT ERROR

Make text: Larger | Smaller

TOP JOBS

51 - 55 of 68

PREVIOUS NEXT

CLINICAL MANAGER
CANCER CARE BETHESDA HOSPITAL

HEAVY DUTY MECHANICS
HUDSON BAY MINING & SMELTING CO., LIMITED

CONTROLLER
ST. CHARLES COUNTRY CLUB

CRANE OPERATOR
HUDSON BAY MINING & SMELTING CO., LIMITED

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
THE COLLEGE OF LICENSED PRACTICAL NURSES OF MANITOBA

All Jobs

OUR COMMUNITIES

Click here for UPTOWN | Click here for Prime Times

Roll over the regions to see which neighbourhoods are included. Click on the region (on the map) to view news specific to that region and its neighbourhoods.

POLL

In light of recent reports of violence in Mexico, would you holiday there?

- Yes, I love Mexico.
- No, I'd choose a different destination.
- I don't take sun holidays.
- I'd go anywhere to get out of this cold.

Submit my Vote

View Results
View Related Story

MOST POPULAR

MOST VIEWS | MOST COMMENTS | MOST EMAILS

TODAY | WEEK | MONTH

1. Facing life with father now gone
2. Neighbours ignore pleas as woman dies
3. In light of recent reports of violence in Mexico, would you holiday there?
4. Putting brakes on elderly drivers
5. Foreign Affairs asking Mexico to investigate allegations tourist raped in jail
6. Harper says he personally favours death penalty but won't reinstate it
7. Get the message out: you're single
8. Owner flip-flops; MS River Rouge will cruise river again
9. Plan in place to subsidize cost of installing sump pumps, backwater valves
10. New stone-cladding woes, another big building fix

TOP COMMENT | TOP RANKED COMMENTS

" Don't tick off seniors or you will just cause a real problem on the roads. Remember we have the time to band together then drive as a group, at the speed limit, on any major artery during any rush hour we want and for as many days as we want. "

Posted by: LWoodie