When it's time to move...

Most seniors would prefer to live at home as long as possible, but seniors needing to move out of that home face a bewildering maze of options ranging from where to live to what to take and what to leave behind. Clearing a home of a lifetime's collection of documents, possessions and their associated memories, can be wrenching. But, these are necessary activities that prove to be less stressful with professional help.

Making homes safer and healthier...

For seniors whose health makes staying home an option, there are modifications that can be performed to minimize the risk of falls and accidents. Simple measures can make "aging in place" a safer alternative where everything is accessible and easy to find.

About Practically Daughters™

Professional Organizers, Susan Borax and Heather Knittel of Good Riddance Professional Organizing Solutions, work with families whose aging relatives are undergoing a housing transition.

This division, named Practically Daughters™ is devoted to supporting families through the emotional and physical aspects of downsizing and organizing homes for relocation or aging in place.

We are downsizing experts who understand how difficult it is to move from a long-time residence and can make the move easier. We help clients sort out and distribute what goods should be given to relatives and charities, sold at garage sales, on-line or through consignment or sent to recycling. We help select the furniture and treasured belongings that will fit best in the new home.

We can optimize your living areas for safety, mobility and convenience.
